Explanation

Introduction

Section 7463 provides a simplified procedure for resolving tax disputes in small tax cases. When this provision was first enacted as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, the amount of deficiency or overpayment placed in dispute in a small tax case could not exceed $1,000. Congress has increased this jurisdictional amount for small tax cases several times. Most recently, the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 increased the amount to $50,000, effective July 22, 1998, and provided additional categories of small tax cases.

In certain instances, a small tax case proceeding may be discontinued; the case is then conducted under regular procedures. See section 7463(d). The conference committee report to the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 states:

the conferees anticipate that the Tax Court will carefully consider (1) IRS objections to small case treatment, such as objections based upon the potential precedential value of the case, as well as (2) the financial impact on the taxpayer, including additional legal fees and costs, of not utilizing small case treatment. [H. Conf. Rept. 105-599, at 245 (1998), 1998-3 C.B. 747, 999.]

From the enactment of section 7463 in 1969, until May 1, 1979, pleadings requirements in small tax cases and regular cases were identical. Effective May 1, 1979, the Court amended former Rule 175(b) to generally eliminate the requirement that the Commissioner file answers in small tax cases. The note to this 1979 amendment states:

Par. (b) of this Rule is amended to change the existing requirement that the Commissioner file an answer to the petition in all small tax cases. Under the new provision, the general rule is that the Commissioner need not file an answer in such cases, unless there is matter on which he has the burden of proof, as, for example, where he relies on an affirmative defense or the determination of fraud on the part of the petitioner. However, even though not required to do so, the Commissioner may file an answer if he so desires.

The experience of the Court under its preexisting procedure has shown that the filing of answers in all small tax cases has not been helpful in the disposition of such cases and has resulted generally in merely calling for unnecessary additional paperwork, particularly in the light of the fact that most of these case are actually disposed of without trial. Furthermore, the Commissioner has assured the Court that, in the relatively small number of cases expected to be tried, he will file with the Court and serve upon the petitioner an informative statement amplifying the matters in dispute that are to be adjudicated.

[71 T.C. 1212.]

Current Rule 173(b) is identical to former Rule 175(b). It provides:

(b) Answer: No answer is required to be filed in a small tax case, except where there is an issue on which the Commissioner bears the burden of proof or where the Court otherwise directs. Where an answer is filed, the provisions of Rule 36 shall apply. In a case where no answer is filed, the allegations of error and facts relating thereto set forth in the petition shall be deemed denied.

Discussion

Small tax cases now comprise about half the Court's docket. Petitioners in small tax cases are increasingly represented by low income taxpayer clinics, which in recent years have proliferated, partly because of funding provided by legislation. The parties as well as the Court would benefit from improved pretrial communication between the parties in small tax cases.

Because current rules generally do not require the Commissioner to file answers in small tax cases, petitioners and low income taxpayer clinics have sometimes had difficulty in identifying and contacting, until shortly before trial, the IRS attorney responsible for a case. Requiring the Commissioner to file answers in all small tax cases will provide petitioners or their counsel the name, address, and telephone number of the IRS attorney responsible for the case well before trial. This information should facilitate essential pretrial communication between the parties, encourage earlier consideration of small tax cases by the appropriate IRS attorney, and reduce instances in which the parties and the Court are surprised by 11th-hour procedural and jurisdictional motions.

In addition, small tax cases move through the administrative system relatively quickly and may present novel issues resulting from changes in the tax law. The filing of answers may promote earlier identification of such issues and assist the Court in making informed and timely decisions as to whether it might be appropriate to discontinue small tax case proceedings in particular instances, pursuant to section 7463(d). It is not anticipated that the proposed amendment will result in any significant delay in the calendaring of small tax cases for trial.

Accordingly, the Tax Court proposes to amend its Rule 173(b) to require the Commissioner to file answers in all small tax cases. The time periods within which to answer or move with respect to the petition, the form and content of the answer, and the effect of the answer will be as provided in Rule 36.
